

South Tyneside - How to get here

Crown copyright 2002

South Tyneside is easy to reach by air, rail and road.

We are just 15 miles from Newcastle's international airport - and a fast, efficient Metro rail service can take you from within the terminal right into the heart of Hebburn, Jarrow and South Shields.

That same Metro system opens up the whole of Tyneside - north as well as south - and is a marvellous way of getting about. If you are driving you can cross the river to North Shields through the Tyne Tunnel at Jarrow and on foot you can get the ferry from South Shields.

Newcastle's Central Station is on the main East Coast railway line between London and Edinburgh with regular services from the Midlands and the West.

The A1 (M), and other major trunk roads lead into South Tyneside where they link up with a modern network of dual carriageways that give access to all parts. And within the borough there is an abundance of reasonably priced taxis and excellent bus services. It all adds up to easy travel without hassle.
